Vandals halt farmer's bid to use sludge fertilizer

By Robert A. Eriandson
Baltimore County Bureau of the Sun

An apparent "agro-terrorist" attack on a tractor has led a White Hall farmer to abandon plans to fertilize his fields with treated sewage sludge this spring and to offer a $5,000 reward for the arrest of the vandals.

David L. Rose, 38, and his father-in-law, Harold E. Smith, 70, of Clearmeadow Farms on Bond Road in Parkton, drew neighborhood opposition when they became the first farmers in northern Baltimore County to agree to use sludge for this year's crops.

Enviro-Gro Technologies of Catonsville applied for a special zoning exemption to permit the sludge operation, and a hearing before Zoning Commissioner J. Robert Haines was scheduled for yesterday morning.

However, Mr. Rose said, he decided to abandon his plans after finding the tractor tires slashed last Tuesday morning.

"I had to do it," he said. "It seems like giving in to them."

Mr. Rose said the $5,000 reward has already been posted with Metro Crime-Stoppers for the arrest of the vandals.

Robert Register, an Enviro-Gro agronomist, said in a letter asking to cancel yesterday's hearing that "Mr. Rose believes the vandalism was probably perpetrated by a few individuals" who opposed the sludge-fertilizer plan.

County police said tracks showed that a car had stopped near one of Mr. Rose's fields and that two sets of footprints led to the tractor.

About 65 acres of the 147-acre farm is used for corn, soybeans, wheat and barley, and Mr. Rose had agreed to allow Enviro-Gro to spread the dry sludge and disc it into the soil in time for spring planting.

Mr. Register said sludge is commonly used in many areas. "It gets a bad name, but compared to chemical fertilizers it has many benefits because it is organic."

Eleven years ago, Good Samaritan's president, James Oakley, hatched the idea for Belvedere Green.

Mr. Oakley said he isn't sure what triggered the notion, except for a general sense that housing was a great need.

"We just wanted to make a commitment to his community," he said. "It sounds like a lot of folders, but that was the motivation. This was my baby. I had some people internally who raised questions: What did we get out of this? The motivation was simply to make a statement to this community."

Dear Mr. Blair:

Enviro-Gro Technologies would like to cancel the Sludge Utilization Permit Application to land apply sewage sludge to the William Dietz farm in Baltimore County.

This request is at the wish of Mr. Dietz. His withdrawal was due to community pressures he and his family were receiving.

It is the opinion of Mr. Dietz that Baltimore County must provide more education before sludge can be an effective agri-business tool in Baltimore County.

I appreciate the assistance that you have provided in this matter.
